

Black lives matter. Black stories matter. Black voices matter.

We acknowledge that Station Theatre's 50-year history has failed to fully recognize the diversity of the stories in our community.

Our society is plagued by the lack of opportunity, fairness, and justice for people of color. It is up to community organizations like ours to take clear and unequivocal steps to do more than just be inclusive, but to overtly and actively seek voices other than those that have typically been heard from our stage.

We are committed to making a plan for the immediate and long-term future to bring you more and more work by people of color in all aspects of theatre – both on our stage and behind the scenes.
